The Project

After the success of Ils Nous Ont Oubliés, Séverine Chavrier has chosen to immerse the audience in a show that recounts the fate of a humiliated man, thirsting for social recognition, in an American South that is torn apart by the Civil War and the frenzy of creeping industrialisation.

Ten years after Les Palmiers Sauvages, Chavrier returns to the words of William Faulkner with one of his most masterful novels. Inspired by a biblical episode, this text, akin to an ancient tragedy, unfolds a multitude of narratives. The words told to the young Quentin, some two generations apart, in the cramped confines of a room with closed shutters, the dormitory of a university in the north of France, or the back seat of a buggy, are organised into stories fragmented by the obsession of the man who states, rehashes, and recomposes the truth before our eyes (and ears), in order to understand his own, based on what the story says about him.

This puzzle lends Absalom, Absalom! a form of suspense, not narrative but spiralling, more enveloping and perhaps more anxiety-provoking and dizzying too. Perhaps it's the dampness of the South descending upon us...

NOTE OF INTENT

But what is this Deep South? This feeling of condemnation that we all carry within us?

What stories do we bear? What heritage? By imitating Quentin's experience, will we succeed in giving voice to the vernacular narratives that the actors in the show also carry, encountering the Faulknerian epic from their own perspective? What do we choose to tell and to whom?

Beyond formal experiments, how can nagging questions of memory and enunciation—not the least of Faulkner's modernities—demand freedom and truth from us on stage?

Absalom, Absalom! traces the destiny of a self-made man who, from a single piece of gold, in a county where he arrives as a total stranger, succeeds in building a pharaonic house, a gigantic estate that he names after himself ("Sutpen's Hundred"), but who nevertheless fails, through incest and fratricide, to establish his lineage and dynasty.

Cinemas, billboards, drive-ins, ghost trains, and haunted houses, a whole world develops out of this constant production of images—a dream-manufacturing yet crushing machine. It provides a screen, a façade, an endless set for a family tragedy that consecrates the impossibility of social revenge, obsessed with the verticality of the father's lineage, which has collapsed here. Young Quentin is himself crushed by this story, of which he is at once the listener, the witness, and the heir, and of which he ultimately becomes the aoidos. With his Canadian comrade Shreve, he finds himself in a timeless face-to-face encounter with a broken youth, sacrificed both by the Civil War and by the arms of the fathers, driven both by the madness of "settlement" and by the fear of contamination that is still law and precedent.

Ultimately, the only viable reality, full of promise and future, is that of interbreeding. In this respect, it is with Édouard Glissant that we read Absalom, Absalom! and it is with him that we dare to walk in Faulkner's footsteps, to visit some of the author's abysses, in this steady journey, which is just that, the unveiling always deferred, with Glissant's grandson on stage and his dramaturgical interpretation in mind.

In Faulkner Mississippi (one of the most beautiful texts ever written about the American author), Glissant reads in Absalom the impossibility for Americans to establish legitimacy in this coveted land, because of the two traumatic events of the massacre of the natives and slavery. Sutpen's failure thus joins the epic of history, the past as well as the future, and through the uneasy evocation of a world that no longer exists, it is the places and times of representation that are set like traps.

Wearing make-up, tattoos, and masks, the performers play with different identities to throw their bodies into the story they seek to recompose, in the silence of action or the burning questioning of the spoken word, in the clash of times that only a stage can help cross in a single movement. Through them, the “ghosts” that inhabit Quentin’s brain “like an empty ballroom, a Republic” can appear. A young, unmarried widow, a dandy bastard, a fluttering mother, a frightened youth, an old stuck-up aunt the size of a doll, a braying partner, an icy henchman, a sulky Lolita, a howling last descendant, a wild dog, turkeys, children, and snakes are the flickering presences and remain the “unbowed” characters of this fallen domain, of this earth that must be scraped to read the inscriptions on the tombstones and dug up to discover the true heritage of a buried world, i.e. voracious exploitation, which is always renewed, right up to the very moment of the performance.

Let’s follow the Faulknerian sentence, from the Compsons to the Snopes, to understand how America goes from corn to popcorn, from cotton fields to Hollywood; to understand, in this ever more assertive commercialism, what America teaches us about ourselves, about our Western societies. For Absalom is also a story that passes through slave-owning Europe. Stories that have yet to be written, the stories of those who have none, because “what is revealed here is not a police truth but a colour of damnation”.

Séverine Chavrier

DIRECTOR

Director of CDN Orléans/Centre-Val de Loire from 2017 to 2023, Séverine Chavrier is a musician, director, and philosophy graduate.

After a hypokhâgne class, she went on to win a gold medal and a degree in piano from the Geneva Conservatoire, as well as a first prize in musical analysis. She began training as an actor at a very young age, taking classes with Michel Fau and François Merle, then taking part in various training courses where she continued to learn from artists such as Félix Prader, Christophe Rauck, Darek Blinski, and Rodrigo Garcia.

Each of her shows is an opportunity for encounters and cross-fertilisation. As an actor and musician, she has worked with many different people while directing her own company, La Sérénade Interrompue. Alongside Rodolphe Burger, she met Jean-Louis Martinelli, for whom she created and performed the music for several shows at Théâtre Nanterre-Amandiers (Schweyk by Bertolt Brecht, Kliniken by Lars Norén, and Les Fiancés de Loches by Feydeau).

Séverine Chavrier has developed a unique approach to directing, in which theatre enters into dialogue with music, dance, images, and literature. She designs her shows using all kinds of materials: the bodies of her performers, the sound of the prepared piano, the videos she often makes herself, not forgetting the spoken word—erratic words that she shapes by immersing herself in the world of the authors she loves.

In 2009, her play Épousailles et Représailles, based on a play by Hanokh Levin, premiered at Théâtre Nanterre-Amandiers and was then programmed at Le Centquatre – Paris by L’Odéon – Théâtre de l’Europe for the Impatience Festival, dissecting the vicissitudes of the couple with humour, cruelty, and humanity. In October 2011, Chavrier, then associate artist at Le Centquatre – Paris, created Série B – Ballard J. G., inspired by James Graham Ballard, for Arte’s Temps d’images Festival, then, at the 2012 Avignon Festival, Plage Ultime, performed at Théâtre Nanterre-Amandiers and MC2 Grenoble.

Between 2014 and 2016, she was invited to create two plays at Théâtre Vidy-Lausanne, Les Palmiers Sauvages, based on the novel I Forget Thee, Jerusalem (The Wild Palms) by William Faulkner, and Nous Sommes Repus Mais Pas Repentis, based on Déjeuner chez Wittgenstein by Thomas Bernhard. After touring France’s leading theatres (Bonlieu, Scène nationale Annecy, Nouveau Théâtre de Montreuil, Comédie de Reims, Théâtre d’Arras, L’Apostrophe Cergy-Pontoise, Théâtre Liberté Toulon, etc.), these two plays were presented as a diptych at L’Odéon – Théâtre de l’Europe in spring 2016. They were then revived at CDN Orléans/Centre-Val de Loire and toured during the 2019/2020 season (Le Monfort Théâtre, Théâtre de la Ville, Théâtre national de Bordeaux en Aquitaine).

Since 2015, Chavrier has also been developing a long-term project with the creation of Après Coups, Projet Un-Femme, the first two parts of which, created in 2015 and 2017, were presented at Théâtre de la Bastille in Paris and toured to Lyon, Rouen, and Orléans, bringing together female artists from the circus and dance worlds. A diptych was created in Orléans before being presented at Théâtre national de Bretagne (Rennes), Manège, Scène nationale-Reims, MC 93, and CDN Besançon Franche-Comté.

Music, which she plays in her own productions or with prestigious improvisers, continues to occupy an important place in her life as an artist. In 2013, she improvised at the piano, in a duo with Jean-Pierre Drouet on percussion for the Festival d'Avignon and Opéra de Lille, and in a trio with Bartabas at La Villette. In autumn 2016, at La Pop (Paris), she created the show Mississippi Cantabile with Congolese bassist Armel Malonga, a musical encounter between North and South.

In January 2020, at the invitation of Carmen Romero and the Santiago a Mil Festival, Chavrier staged a Spanish version of Les Palmiers Sauvages (Las Palmeras Salvajes), with a Chilean artistic and technical team. This new version of Faulkner's text has been touring Spanish-speaking countries ever since.

In 2020, her creation about adolescence and music, Aria da Capo, premiered at Théâtre national de Strasbourg in partnership with Festival Musica. The show toured during the 20/21 season (CDN Orléans/Centre-Val de Loire, Théâtre de la Ville-Les Abbesses, Centre Pompidou) and in 22/23 (Théâtre des 13 vents – CDN Montpellier, Théâtre national de Bordeaux en Aquitaine, Théâtr de la Cité – CDN Toulouse Occitanie, Les Halles de Schaerbeek – Brussels, Théâtre Nanterre-Amandiers). In 23/24, it was presented at the Festival d'Otoño - Madrid in November and has been performed at the Comédie de Valence, CDN Drôme-Ardèche in March.

In 2022, she created Ils Nous Ont Oubliés by Thomas Bernhard at Teatre Nacional de Catalunya in Barcelona continuing to explore the relationship between theatre, music, images, and literature. The production was then presented at Odéon-Théâtre de l'Europe, Teatro Nacional São João de Porto, Comédie de Genève and, in January 2024, at La Colline - Théâtre national.

In autumn 2023, Séverine Chavrier appeared at the Festival Musica de Strasbourg with KV385, a staging of Mozart's Symphony No. 35, "Haffner", created with composer and musician Pierre Jodkowski and performed by the Orchestre philharmonique de Strasbourg. She is currently working on an adaptation of Faulkner's novel Absalom, Absalom!

Louise Sari

SET DESIGNER

Louise Sari trained at ENSATT, from where she graduated in the Scenography section, after a BTS in Space Design at the Ecole Boule, a year at NABA in Milan, and a spell in the workshops of Théâtre de Nanterre-Amandiers.

She designed the sets for Rock'n Chair by Arthur Perole at Théâtre National de Chaillot, for Juste la Fin du Monde, Nu Masculin Debout, and Serena by Clément Pascaud at T.U Nantes, Un Amour de Swann by Nicolas Kerszenbaum at Chartreuse de Villeneuve-lés-Avignon, Le Pont du Nord and Ombre, Eurydice parle by Marie Fortuit. She also designed the set and several installations for an art centre in the LBO retirement home in Chambéry under the direction of Mohamed el Khatib, with whom she also collaborated on his creation Gardien Party and the Renault 12 exhibition at Mucem.

Interested in the links between art and education, Sari joined the educational team at ENSATT in 2015 and ran several workshops at ESAD in Orléans. Since 2015, she has been working with Séverine Chavrier on a number of shows. She worked on the set and stage design for Nous Sommes Repus Mais Pas Repentis, Après Coups – Projet Un-Femme, Egmont, Aria da Capo, Ils Nous Ont Oubliés, and Absalom, Absalom!

Armel Malonga

MUSICIAN

A musician from Congo Brazzaville, Armel Malonga inherited his passion for music from his family. A self-taught performer, he is renowned as a left-handed bass guitarist, multi-instrumentalist, singer, songwriter, and arranger. Influenced as much by great classical composers as by traditional musicians, he has forged his own contemporary style. In his musical research, he moves from one genre to another, defending “a universal language and a world without borders”.

A talented composer and arranger, he has worked with some of the biggest names in Congolese music, such as Zao, opening the door to international success in 1996. His virtuosity on his favourite instrument, the bass guitar, was subsequently showcased with Les Bantous de la Capitale, Ali Farka Touré, Rido Bayonne, Pierre Akendengué, Jacob Desvarieu, Meiway, Lokua Kanza, etc.

Malonga is a passionate artist who is involved in his country's artistic scene. He has surrounded himself with numerous Brazzaville artists and for the past 20 years has been running workshops and masterclasses aimed at both professionals and novices. These workshops have led to the creation of "Kudia", a cultural space in Brazzaville that acts as an open stage for artists and a live venue.

He has worked with internationally renowned directors and choreographers to introduce this style, of which he is the sole proponent, into contemporary dance and theatre productions, including Delavallet Bidiefono, Séverine Chavier, Dieudonné Niangouna, Jean Paul Delors, Andrey Ouamba, and Etienne Minoungou.

She continues to teach regularly at university and to publish the work of the artists she meets.
